Dean Christine Theodoropoulos Announces Retirement

Christine Theodoropoulos, dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design (CAED), announced her intention to retire from Cal Poly. Theodoropoulos joined Cal Poly in 2012 as the first woman to serve as dean of the CAED. She is the second-longest-serving dean in the college's 75-year history and the longest-serving dean among the current leadership of Cal Poly's six academic colleges. During Theodoropoulos's tenure as dean, the CAED strengthened faculty expertise and grew student enrollment while advancing the national recognition of its accredited programs. She formed a college leadership team that engaged the CAED community as it developed an academic master plan and a diversity strategic plan, expanded the size and role of the Dean's Leadership Council, and founded the college's first DEI Committee. Provost Cynthia Jackson-Elmoore will work with Theodoropoulos in the coming year while the university conducts a nationwide search for the next college dean and facilitates a leadership transition that ensures the continued success of the CAED community and positions the college for future achievements that will sustain the excellence of CAED programs. More information on the search process and opportunities for the campus community to participate will be shared in the coming weeks. Read the news release at <https://calpolynews.calpoly.edu>.

Meet ASI President Gracie Babatola

This fall, Gracie Babatola began her term as president of Associated Students Inc. The third-year political science major ran her election campaign on a platform of “rebuilding connections.” As the new school year began, she spoke with Cal Poly News about her goals for the coming year and what it means to serve others. “I’ve always just loved being in a room where decisions were being made ... but what really motivated me to run was I felt that there was a disconnection between students and ASI,” she said. “COVID had really taken a toll in student government, but I felt that I perhaps had a fresh perspective that could be brought into student government.” Read the full Q&A at <https://www.calpoly.edu/news>.

Retirements

After 28-plus years at Cal Poly, Associate Dean Bill Hendricks is retiring. Join the College of Agriculture, Food and Environmental Sciences to celebrate Hendricks’ career and thank him for his years of service from 4 to 6 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 1, at the JUSTIN and J. LOHR Center for Wine and Viticulture. The college is gathering videos to be shared at the celebration (<https://www.tribute.co/bill-hendricks-retirement>). Hendricks served as a professor and head of the college’s Experience Industry Management Department for more than two decades prior to becoming an associate dean in August 2020. While in the dean’s office, he oversaw college administration and enrollment management. In 2016, he oversaw the transition of the Experience Industry Management Department from Recreation, Parks and Tourism Administration — making it the first of its kind in the country. He is the recipient of Cal Poly’s Distinguished Scholarship award; the USDA Forest Service and International Journal of Wilderness, Excellence in Wilderness Management Research award; and the CAFES Faculty Teaching Excellence award. He has also conducted research for Visit California and the Aldo Leopold Wilderness Research Institute. In retirement, he plans to ski, surf and hike often.
